

Business Questions

1. Which product categories receive the highest and lowest average ratings?

Answer:

The analysis showed that most product categories received good ratings from customers. The Unspecified category had the highest average rating, while categories like Trend and Chemises had relatively lower ratings. This suggests that customers are generally happy with most products, but the lower-rated categories may need closer attention to understand what customers are dissatisfied with.

2. Which product categories are recommended the most by customers?

Answer:

Among all product categories, Dresses received the highest number of customer recommendations, followed by Blouses and Sweaters. This indicates that customers are more confident recommending these products, likely because they meet their expectations in terms of quality, style, or comfort.

3. Is there a relationship between product ratings and customer recommendations?

Answer:

Yes. Customers who gave products higher ratings were much more likely to recommend them. Most 4-star and 5-star reviews were accompanied by recommendations, while products with lower ratings were less likely to be recommended. This shows that customer satisfaction has a strong influence on whether they would recommend a product to others.

4. Which department receives the highest number of customer reviews?

Answer:

The Tops department received the highest number of customer reviews, followed by Dresses and Bottoms. This could mean these departments have higher sales or that customers are more engaged with these products and are more willing to share their experiences.

5. Which product categories receive the highest positive feedback from customers?

Answer:

The Dresses category received the highest amount of positive feedback from other customers. This suggests that reviews in this category were especially useful and appreciated by shoppers, making them valuable for helping future customers make purchase decisions.

6. Which divisions have the highest customer satisfaction?

Answer:

The Unspecified division recorded the highest average rating, while the General division had the lowest. Although the Unspecified division performed well, it may contain products that were not properly classified, so the result should be interpreted carefully.
